In a translation of writings of Dr. Arnold Keller, Darnell and Block quote "Soon, the speculators were no longer satisfied with single issues.

"Entire districts were harvested. Some 40 (sic) communities in the District of Pinneberg were induced to issue complete sets of six notes, all of which were taken possession of by the dealer L. Brieger in Hamburg.

"Naturally, no motive was offered for so many different notes by the fairly unattractive district of 'flatland' (northwest of Hamburg; a flower growing area): the inspiration had to be sought from further afield - all the heavens, the sun, moon, stars and angels, fields and woods, country life and the theatre, and whatever else occurred to the producers.

"In comparison with this, the Fritz Reuter notes form an advantageous contrast."

"Reutergeld" issues consisted of 70 towns in Mecklenburg Schwerin which issued three notes each, the effort of five artists.

Hanf was the producer and printer of the Pinneburg notes. Aficionados of watermarks will observe that most notes issued for the district bear the same watermark, though some vary, and others bear no watermark.

Denominations of most cities in the Hanf series are two each of 25, 50 and 75 Pfennig. Eight of the sets include values of 20, 30, 40, 60, 70 and 80-Pfennig.

Musser comments, "The assumption is that Leo Brieger of Hamburg purchased the issuing rights from the communities and made himself the sole distributor. It is difficult today to pinpoint all of these locations on a map. Some are still small and insignificant hamlets.

"Others are tiny parts of other towns, while some have been incorporated into the city of Hamburg.

A horse-drawn wagon attends the county fair, as seen on the back of a 70-Pfennig notes of Westerhorn, L-1378

"If one can overlook the relative unattractiveness of this 'family' of Notgeld, the challenge to complete the series is rather formidable.

"In comparison with many other issues these were printed in small numbers. This is reflected in currently high prices being quoted in pricelists emanating from Hamburg."

Notgeld guru Hermann Krause suggests "Observe the signatures on the notes and you will find that many have the same signature.

"It boils down to just a few groups. Take, for example, the notes from Ellerhoop: besides the town name they list 'Amtsbezirk Bevern.' Consequently, they have the same signature as the Bevern notes and several other nearby towns."

Musser comments "All Kreis Pinneberg notes are generally considered common. Actually, they are not common at all, since the printing was only 10,000 for each community. Compared with really common types of Notgeld, with printing amounts usually of several hundred thousand, they belong to the scarce Notgeld.

"Watch the serial numbers on the notes; should you ever find one with a number above 10,000, it would be a sensation. The only exception is Kummerfeld, with a much larger quantity," Musser observes.

And he concludes that after you have used the following list as a checklist and obtained all the notes, you can begin to collect the varieties in color, serial numbers and watermarks. Good hunting!

Heede, Amtsbezirk Hemdingen, issued a set of notes,
L-568

It is not very often we sermonize to readers.

Recent incidents got some hackles up on my neck, and I feel they should be addressed.

We have not told readers what to collect or how to keep their Notgeld. From time to time we have let readers tell what they collect and how they maintain their collections.

I have been very quiet on the topic of condition, because I realize that every note I offer for sale is not crisp, uncirculated, pristine, proof, without blemish, better than printed 75 years ago. We are dealing with material which saw circulation during tough economic times and much of it was used.

But not just used. Abused. And by collectors. Recently more than 1,100 Notgeld pieces were offered to me by a long-time collector. Every note bore markings of tape where it had been bound to pages of some sort. Worse, where the tape had been, the paper was still sticky, and difficult to remove from plastic pages in which it had been placed.

Black photo hinges will also leave their tell-tale mark.

In good conscience I could not offer these to readers, and rejected the deal.

Our property is our property, to do with us as we feel fit. But if we have a sense of temporary custodialship of our coin and paper money collections, it would appear to be incumbent on us to at least pass it on in the same condition in which it was received.

Now the other matter.

THE FRAKTUR is not copyrighted, and I am not so proprietary about it as to ask that others who might find the information useful to not quote from it.

But when the information in a copyrighted publication is lifted without prior permission and used without crediting the source, one should remember that there are copyright laws and the fury of the author and courts perhaps would be greater than any penalties which might be meted.

One of the problems of copying from another is often that added mis-information is passed on which becomes a reflection upon the one from whom the material was taken.

So please, whether quoting from THE FRAKTUR or any copyrighted matter, please have the common courtesy to credit the author, publication, date and place of publication.

Or look for fury.
